

Directions to Sea Glass Beach

Our little beach is easy to find and perfect for sunbathing, an afternoon swim, exploring, and on calm days, a bit of snorkeling. It takes less than three minutes to walk to the beach. It is not a white sandy beach dotted with coconut trees, but we love it just the same.

- As you exit the house, turn left on Calle Baldorioty de Castro.
- At the first corner, turn left and walk two blocks. You will pass the dead end street right behind us and arrive in front of a little plaza on the corner.
- Turn left again and follow the road (which turns into a narrow driveway) down the hill to the water.

The beach can be sandy or rocky and have a gradual drop off or a sudden drop off. It all depends on the direction of the waves and the wind. We usually hang our stuff in the tree by the creek.

For variety, you can walk about 100 feet down the beach and you will find a break in the rocks. The bottom is a bit rocky, but once you get a bit off shore it is also a great place to swim.

For calm water snorkeling, swim out past the rocks on the right side of the beach and swim toward the barge. You will find lots of interesting things to see, but in no way does this area compare to some of the premier snorkeling spots on the island.

If you are into more deserted beaches and like a bit of adventure, head west toward the end of the beach and the first outcrop you can see. You can walk almost three-quarters of a mile down the beach, but you should wear sturdy shoes as some rock walking and a rock scramble or two will be necessary. The distant beaches that you can see are lovely and usually deserted, but getting there takes a good grip and a little bravery, especially when the tide is high and the waves are crashing. Please be careful and don't fall off the rocks onto the rocks!

About the glass... red glass is almost impossible to find, and blue glass is a close second. Most of the beach glass anymore is green, white and brown. If you find a jagged piece of glass on the beach, like a broken bottle, please take it home and put it in the trash. If you find a piece of glass that isn't quite ready, just toss it back into the ocean. There are trash cans at the top of the hill on the right hand side of the street when you leave that you can use for any trash that you find on the beach.

Have fun, be safe, and remember to leave your valuables at home!
